Strategy

The portfolio relies on stringent quantitative methods for stock selection. Each stock is also evaluated on its own fundamental merits and placed in the context of current macroeconomic trends. The portfolio invests primarily in listed equity across various international exchanges. The investment selection may include common or preferred stock, ETFs, ADRs, and unlisted over-thecounter instruments. Typically, the portfolio targets large and megacap companies with proven track records, high barriers to entry, unique products, and exceptional management teams. Valuation plays an important role in the investment process but premium-rated stocks will be included where there are expectations of supernormal growth. Investments are made across different industries, geographies, markets, and sectors to ensure the portfolio's resilience during periods of high volatility. Equity investing is inherently risky, but with long-term wealth creation in mind, maintaining exposure and capitalising on opportunities during times of uncertainty, is essential to generating sustained out-performance.
